Technology Companies look to Atlanta for U.S. Home - Innovation Center for Disaster Recovery (ICDR) Brings Technology Leaders & Innovators to the U.S.

January 25, 2013 - Atlanta, Georgia --- Technology companies looking to set up operations in the United States to contribute to Disaster Recovery for Business efforts in the U.S., plan to locate their offices in Atlanta.

In the crowded technology centers small innovators can be low on the priority list. In international Innovation Center for Disaster Recovery (ICDR) in Atlanta, technology-driven SMEs get attention and support from business experts and financiers, government and non-government officials, and others involved in Disaster Recovery for Business efforts, including economic growth and job creation across the regions affected by the latest storms.

The trade visits to the Gulf Coast and the East Coast will be a key part of ICDR's new initiative serving Businesses, Technology Incubators, Economic Development Agencies, Chambers of Commerce, Government Agencies, NGOs, and Non-Profits. The Disaster Recovery for Business initiative brings new technology to market through ICDR partner projects, and has identified Atlanta as a global Hub for Innovation for Disaster Preparedness and Recovery.

The technology companies that join ICDR sponsored Trade Missions, will get access to Disaster Recovery leaders in the United States. C-level executives, technology experts, and investors will learn about a welcoming and fostering environment for companies that includes partners from the private and public sectors.

'Investing in Innovation and Disaster Recovery Forum' in Atlanta on February 28th, 2013, brings together business and policy leaders and investors from around the world to discuss how small to large size companies can contribute to solutions in Disaster areas. The meeting attendees will get the latest updates from a Disaster Recovery leadership forum meeting at the Capitol Hill and the Gulf Coast, attended by the ICDR leadership team in January 2013. The meeting attendees will receive an invitation to join ICDR Advisory Teams, Trade Missions, and business incubator in Atlanta to support a growing need for new technology expertise for the emerging ecosystem of Disaster Recovery partner projects in the U.S.
